

LAURA TAMOJ
SCREENWRITER

At the tender age of 12, Laura shot her first movie in the local forest of Bad Honnef: a crime story about a murdered jogger. A lot has happened since. A graduation from high school and university, and plenty of work experience later, Laura may have taken a temporary step back from the crime genre, but she has also focused on the aspect of filmmaking that still excites her the most: script writing.

Her degree in Scenic Arts from the University of Hildesheim is what played the most influential part in that development. Having started her degree in 2011 with a focus on theater, Laura finished it four years later with a bachelor thesis on storytelling, fandom and the queer reading of superheroes. Her time at university not only allowed her to discover and explore her passion for pop-culture, but also to write and direct the webseries QUASINORMAL and her own short film SHOTGUN.

It was an invitation to the mentoring program IDM Racconti Script Lab #6 that prompted Laura to focus her career entirely on script writing in 2017. During the program she developed a pitch for the post-apocalyptic TV series ZERO, which she eventually presented at the International Rome Film Fest. Since then, Laura has gathered experience writing for a multitude of genres and formats – anything from legal dramedy to interactive romantic comedy. In doing so, Laura has discovered what makes her heart beat faster for a story: complex, morally dubious characters, queer love stories told casually and honestly, and a good chunk of human warmth and humor.

Today, Laura lives and works in Berlin.
